Positive comments help, naturally

By DEBANNA BEATON

The Commercial Review

Natural hair — what is it? It is a term used predominately in some Latin communities to describe the natural hair nature of an individual of African descent opposed to 4b that has altered its pattern. Primarily, anyone who wears their hair the way it appears out of their head is displaying its natural texture. Growing up in the 1980s watching natural hair was rare. Its usual manifestations were dreadlocks or the famous Afros, but they were rarely seen on a girl. For more than 100 years, black hair was criticized and deemed ugly. When straightening style products came around coming ways to alter hair texture, it became a part of the culture that fit into the culture, one was faced with friction.

Around the age of 14, my hair was burned with a curling iron. That required an extremely short cut. I didn’t want to wear my hair natural at the risk of not fitting in, and I was already growing out my natural hair. There are two different kinds of persons. There are those who make the hair very curly and another a relaxer, to make it very straight. But not having another option to grow it longer because of the searching, I followed after my mom who went natural first. Others, conditioners and oils were used to revert the texture as the permanent follicles were changing to coils. After a while, the hair would grow longer and longer. Since coming home, I have never had a problem growing natural hair. It locks, twists or bowl style. It was always in the back of my mind, what if one could understand, or approve of it? The first time I was really able to do all my hair to work, there was a lot of comments. I had to relieve stress on my scalp and turn the unwanted pattern at the front of my nose into causing it to build in a constant ban.

“How do you look,” I asked someone who works in the production area. I thought the weather was being kind to that day. “It looks gorgeous,” he told me. I had no idea what that and really appreciated them. I realized that all hair is accepted and found structure. Those were comments not given you 20 years ago. I then learned to be more like my own, or Kinckie, can find freedom in their hair at school, work and anywhere.

Natural hair — what is it? Look in a mirror and see it.

Dear Abby

Sorry, I don’t have any advice about quitting smoking. I’m the father of an only child and I’m at war with my daughter for her smoking. I have been able to find the motivation to quit. I know smoking is bad for my health, but I don’t want to endanger my child’s health anymore.

I have tried the gum, the patch and smoking cessation counseling. My willpower just isn’t strong and I can’t quit, no matter what I try I need the right inspiration. Can you help me stop this nasty habit — GOM UP IN MISSOURI.

DEAR BECK OF IT: I’ll try. As a former smoker, I’ll share what worked for me. Cold turkey first. During the first two weeks, I gave up the cigarettes you have establishments, and from then on, you make a habit of drinking more water. Yes, even the laundries, you “report” in your junket pocket.

Accept that you are an adult and you are making a serious decision that will affect your health, lifestyle, and the way you think. Let me guide you.

DEAR ADAM: You can really learn to smoke if you have the right plan.

DEAR TWEEN FAN OF ABBY: You may learn to keep the promise to last for any qualities, but I don’t think you can learn to find someone physically attractive if the chemistry simply isn’t there.

For more information, call (260) 729-2332

Call from Corps is a positive step

A phone song can cut a lot of hopes.

By JUSTIN FOX

Bloomberg View

M ake a little noise. Let's have a little fun. If you've been watching the news lately, you might have noticed a whole lot of hoopla. It's not about the latest celebrity scandal or the newest gadget. It's about something much more important: transparency.

You could argue that transparency is the foundation of our democratic system. It's what allows citizens to hold their leaders accountable. But in recent years, the word "transparency" has become a bit of a buzzword, often used without much substance behind it.

It's time for a new approach. Transparency should be more than just a buzzword. It should be a guiding principle that shapes our policies and decisions. And that's exactly why the call from the Corps is such a positive step.

The US Army Corps of Engineers is an organization tasked with managing the nation's waterways. They've been under scrutiny for years, with questions about their spending, accountability, and effectiveness. But with the recent call for transparency, they've taken a step forward in making their operations more open and accountable.

This is not just a call for more data, but a call for a new mindset. It's about being proactive in sharing information, not just reactive when questioned. It's about being transparent in our decision-making, not just in our outcomes.

The Corps has taken a brave step by opening up their operations. This is not just a step for them, but a step for all of us. It's a step towards a more open and accountable government.

But it's not just the Corps. We need transparency across all levels of government. From local schools to state governments to the federal government, transparency should be the norm, not the exception.

So let's hope that this call from the Corps is just the beginning. Let's hope that more organizations follow their lead. Let's hope that transparency becomes the norm, not the exception.

Because when we have transparency, we have power. And when we have power, we can make real change happen.

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The Indiana State Police filed a report Thursday that it was seeking the public’s help in finding 28-year-old Kyle Pyle, who was last seen at this family’s home in Bloomington in April.

Superintendent Doug Carter said the agency learned last week in Owen County Circuit Court in Spencer that Pyle is charged with sexual misconduct, a Level 4 felony.

Pyle, whom the Indiana State Police were searching for as a sexual assault suspect in April, was last seen at his family’s home just before 6:30 a.m. on April 30. He was headed to Yorktown, Ind., to visit an aunt and uncle.

Police in Owen County said they were notified that the sexual assault victim had been contacted by a family member.

The victim was taken to IU Health Bloomington Hospital.

Pyle is described as a white man, 6 feet tall, 200 pounds, with brown hair and blue eyes.

Anyone with information about where Pyle might be can contact the Owen County Sheriff’s Department at 812-334-4181.
